

motivation to do good and to shun evil.

It has been increasingly recognised that mankind's global society is in need of a global code of ethics,(6) of a universal standard of values. The Bahá'í Faith offers a new ethical standard. In the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh we find a new law of God, an immense wealth of ethical ordinances, which infuse humanity with a new ethic. Like the prophets of the past, Bahá'u'lláh summons men to change their ways, and proclaims that the Kingdom of God must first be built in their hearts.

This paper is not an introduction to Bahá'í ethics, it merely outlines some features of this new morality, which is destined to fill the ethical vacuum left by the dying morality. It is beyond the scope of this article to go into the details of concepts such as "virtue" and "character", or to illuminate the inner structures of particular virtues, let alone discuss the vast field of social ethics. As far as I know, the only literature analysing Bahá'í perspectives of ethics in a systematic fashion, to which I could refer, is a brief contribution by Ihsan Halabi.(7)

I.

General views

1. The Bahá'í Faith is not concerned with metaphysical speculations or dogmatic hair-splittings. Instead, it is focused on right action and right motivation; in other words, on ethics. According to Bahá'u'lláh's own definition "the essence of faith" consists in "fewness of words and abundance of deeds."(8) The divine ordinances "which concern the realm of morals and ethics" are, as 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated, "the fundamental aspect of the religion of God."(9) The aim of all morals is man's happiness. Scripture's moral instructions are "the everlasting torch of divine guidance", (10) the "Straight Path"(11) to human happiness which "consists only in drawing closer to the Threshold of Almighty God."(12)

Moral instructions and directives that can be taken as a point of departure for a Bahá'í system of ethics are scattered throughout the Bahá'í Writings and are not presented in a systematic way. The whole body of the Scripture contains a wealth of different kinds of normative statements: commandments and prohibitions, catalogues of virtues, warnings against evil deeds, predictions about the dire consequences of a life spent in pursuit of lust, passion and vice, and injunctions to live a life of virtue and service that is pleasing to God.

2. Bahá'í morality is based on divine Revelation: God is the Lawgiver, the supreme source of all values. Like Moses on Sinai,(13) Bahá'u'lláh has brought to humanity the "tables of stone", bearing a new hierarchy of values. Thus Bahá'í morality is not a philosophical set of standards. Rather, it is, as in past salvation history, guidance under the authority of an enlightened teacher who claims that His Book is the standard for good and evil, "the Infallible Balance which the hand of God is holding."(14)

According to Bahá'u'lláh, God is the source "of all good"(15) :

"He, verily, enjoineeth on all men what is right and forbiddeth whatsoever degradeth their station."(16) This verse suggests that Bahá'í ethics is not based primarily on human reason, but rather on God's sovereignty,(17) on the "Most Great Infallibility"(18) of the Manifestation and on His new Covenant. Nevertheless, reason has its indispensable functions within the system (which is a subject beyond the scope of the present paper(19)).

3. Bahá'í morality is also based on anthropological presuppositions ?

Bahá'u'lláh's image of man ? and metaphysical objectives.

Of all creatures it is man who is "nearest to God." He has been created

"rich" and "noble," and is potentially "the most perfect of all created things." In man "are potentially revealed all the attributes of God." Whereas

"the animal creation is captive to matter, God has given freedom to man."

He has the choice "between justice and injustice," "the power both to do good and to do evil."(20) Thus, man is responsible for his actions.

It is undeniable that man is strongly influenced by his genetic and social determinants. However, despite these determining factors, he has a capacity to override the needs of his lower nature in keeping with ethical imperatives. Man has the capacity to be master of his natural drives, to control, channel and sublimate his urges, to utilize and transform them

"into human perfections."(21) As in the Gospel,(22) Bahá'í Scripture calls man to acquire perfection. He should "sanctify his heart", (23) and free himself "from the fetters of this world."(24)

Through the knowledge, love and fear of God, by goodly deeds, self-sacrifice, and detachment from the world, he may attain spiritual rebirth and enter the "Kingdom of everlasting life."(25)

Bahá'u'lláh's image of man is a clear verdict on the pessimistic image associated with Christianity (especially with Protestant theology),(26)

as well as on the simplistic message of the Enlightenment that man is good.

In contrast to Church dogma man is not born with a corrupt nature, in a state of sin. He is not a fallen being who lost his freedom in "Adam's Fall" and has lived thereafter in corruption, his nature perverted and his reason completely clouded. On the other hand, man is not programmed for good either so that under the right social conditions happiness and peace follow inevitably. Even in "the best of all possible worlds," happiness and peace are not available if man fails to develop ? through his own efforts and through the grace of God ? into that for which he was created.

Moreover, Bahá'u'lláh's concept of man also dismisses philosophical determinism and the materialistic concepts advocated by some empirical humanists who have suggested that man is not free to act, but rather his actions are determined by his own drives and the restraints imposed upon him by society. I have called such materialistic notions the "Innocence Mania",⁽²⁷⁾ a secular dogma that nobody is responsible for anything, that crime is determined exclusively by social conditions, and the individual is the victim of circumstance. When such doctrines are taken to their logical extensions, they absurdly suggest that the individual is good whereas society is bad, a notion which can theoretically provide the criminal with an alibi.

Finally, Bahá'u'lláh's image of man is a verdict on hedonism,⁽²⁸⁾ on the insatiable desire for enjoyment and pleasure, for satisfaction of the urges and immoderate strivings for material prosperity and luxury, the cult of "mammon and orgasm," a verdict on the life-style of modern man. Man has not been created for a life of constant enjoyment, fun and unrestrained self-indulgence, but to free himself "from the fetters of this world",⁽²⁹⁾ to become "the recipient of the effulgences of divine attributes"⁽³⁰⁾ and to act as a standard-bearer of an "ever-advancing civilisation."⁽³¹⁾ Bahá'u'lláh castigates those souls who have "made a God" of their passions,⁽³²⁾ who move "as the beasts of the field... within the pastures of desire and passion"⁽³³⁾ and are "like the bats of darkness."⁽³⁴⁾ Bahá'u'lláh points to the futility of the material world and the transitory nature of earthly riches and counsels his people to acquire imperishable treasures.⁽³⁵⁾ The shortness of life and the transitoriness of worldly goods are subjects often repeated in Bahá'u'lláh's writings:

The days of your life flee away as a breath of wind...

Reflect, O people! What hath become of your bygone days, your lost centuries?...

The days of your life, that are less than a fleeting moment... Rejoice not in the things ye possess; tonight they are yours, tomorrow others will possess them ... Know ye that the world and its vanities and its embellishments shall pass away.⁽³⁶⁾

However, asceticism and escapism from the world are also strongly rejected by Bahá'u'lláh.⁽³⁷⁾

4. Another presupposition of Bahá'í ethics is the metaphysical significance of human actions. Ethical principles devoid of reward for suitable behaviour or sanctions against contrary behaviour would have little chance of being obeyed. Like other religions, the Bahá'í Faith proclaims that man will find retribution according to his "faith and conduct."⁽³⁸⁾ "Reward and punishment"⁽³⁹⁾ are basic pillars of revealed religion and the emanation of divine justice. All of man's good and evil deeds, even "the secrets of the heart,"⁽⁴⁰⁾ are "open and manifest as the day"(41) to the heavenly judge. Thus, theonomic(42) ethics has two decisive mechanisms which a secular society and an ethics purely based on reason lack.

First, it reserves a metaphysical reward for people who obey the statutes of God(43) (whereas in society, according to 'Abdu'l-Bahá, "no laws exist to reward him" who acts in conformity with the law and shuns evil(44)). Second, man's conduct is judged in an omnipresent court which can lay "bare and manifest"(45) even concealed wrong-doings, whereas ? as 'Abdu'l-Bahá pointed out ? the state can only punish
"the manifest crime and not the concealed sin"(46)
(and ? as I add ? only those who have been apprehended(47)), and only when someone has been caught. This belief in the immortality of the soul and in an all-knowing judging God ought to provide the believers with sufficient motivation for moral conduct. Yet, the highest morality does not consist in actions performed in the hope of heavenly reward or in fear of punishment; good deeds should be done for the sake of God.(48)

II.

The new dimension

As with the religions of the past, Bahá'u'lláh's revelation aims at a change, at the "transformation"(49) and spiritual rebirth(50) of both the individual and society by the creative Word of God. The purpose of Bahá'u'lláh's mission is to summon all mankind to truthfulness and sincerity, to piety and trustworthiness, to resignation and submissiveness to the Will of God, to forbearance and kindness, to uprightness and wisdom.

His object is to array every man with the mantle of a saintly character, and to adorn him with the ornament of holy and goodly deeds.(51)

What is the new dimension of His morality? Compared with religious moral systems of the past, Bahá'u'lláh's morality is not new. The values He proclaims have been "revealed unto the prophets of old"(52) and "described in all the heavenly books."(53)
They are the eternal values which belong to the "one and indivisible religion of God."(54) They are universal, constituting the "spiritual, immutable law", (55) which is "the fundamental reality of all religions", (56)
"changeless and eternal."(57) Bahá'u'lláh called it the "law of love, which, like a fountain, always flows and is never overtaken by change."(58)

However, as in the previous Heilsgeschichte the new revelation purifies these values from any encrustations, distortions, misinterpretations and shifts in emphasis which have arisen since their previous exposition by the past revelation. The new revelation, which is the true divine "reformation"(59) provides these values with a new language, with new meanings and nuances, and, above all, with a new spiritual power. In contrast with the eternity of individual ethics, the norms of social ethics are liable to abrogation and change by the new divine legislation according to the needs and requirements of the age.(60)

Structures

What are the outlines, structures and contents of this morality? Although reason demands that a subject be presented systematically, it is very difficult to implement this in the case of ethics.(61)

The structures and classifications which I am presenting here are the result of my own research and interpretation of the Scripture. Two different categories of normative statements can be clearly identified:

Bahá'í ethics is teleological.(62) There are injunctions that aim at a religious ethics of being (Seinsethik), at virtues, i.e. basic dispositions, which are not natural gifts but which must be acquired and practised from childhood in order to become part of one's character. Those who are adorned with "goodly deeds"(63) and "a praiseworthy character,"(64) according to Bahá'u'lláh, carry "the best mantle for men from God": "The light of a good character surpasses the light of the sun and the radiance thereof."(65)

Another category is of moral instructions that can be found in the Scripture, especially in Bahá'u'lláh's Kitáb-i-Aqdas: laws and ordinances, commandments and prohibitions. They are deontological,(66) presenting supreme values in a concrete form. They are obligatory, and a duty. These two forms ? teleological and deontological ? are not contradictory, but only different, complementary forms directed at the same final goal: God's pleasure and human perfection.

The manifold ethical imperatives within Bahá'í scripture make it clear that the virtues are not a mere accumulation of moral values, but they exist in an hierarchy as indicated in the scripture.(67)

They condition, support, and limit one another, and it is the constant task of those who live according to these values to ensure that this harmonious order not be disturbed by a shift of emphasis.(68)

This hierarchy of virtues exists on three levels:

1. There are virtues that pertain to God, which I would call "theological virtues." They are assigned "the highest rank" whereas all others are described as "secondary and subordinate to them."(69) Among these "highest and most laudable"(70) virtues are the love of God(71) and the twin-duties of the Covenant,(72) self-surrender, trust in God,(73) "submissiveness(74) and fear of God,(75) "steadfastness in His Cause,"(76) fortitude,(77) patience,(78)

servitude(79) and piety,(80) "purity of heart while communing with God, forbearance, resignation to whatever the Almighty has decreed, contentment with the things His Will hath provided, patience, nay thankfulness in the midst of tribulation, and complete reliance, in all circumstances, upon Him."(81)

2. A second category of virtues is closely related to Bahá'í anthropology, to the purpose of human existence. I would call them the "virtues of the Path." It is man's goal in this earthly life to actualise his potential nobility, to free himself "from the assaults of passion and desire" and from "the shackles of this nether world,"(82) to become perfect(83) and to manifest "the attributes of God."(84) The key-words for this path, this process of human self-realisation are detachment, purity, chastity and sanctity. The way of mankind to God, the "Straight Path," appears as the "path of detachment."(85)

a)

Detachment, the purification of the heart from the dross and shackles of this transient world is a leitmotiv throughout the scripture.(86) The associated virtues of self-renunciation, selflessness and self-denial are prerequisites for all the "worldly virtues."

b)

Purity,(87) the core of which is "purity of the heart,"(88) is a central value in this ethical system.(89) Purity and cleanliness, which are the subject of numerous admonitions in the Qur'án(90) and the traditions(91) have been stressed also by the Báb in His Persian Bayán: "God loveth those who are pure... Purification is regarded as the most acceptable means for attaining nearness unto God and as the most meritorious of all deeds."(92) Bahá'u'lláh enjoins the servants of God and His handmaidens "to be pure and to fear God,"(93) thus summarising His ethical injunctions. In The Kitáb-i-Aqdas there are injunctions regarding cleanliness, ritual and moral purity as well.(94) A key-term of Bahá'í ethics is laáfah (refinement): "Hold ye fast unto refinement under all conditions."(95)

c)

Chastity is the virtue which keeps human drives within the limits of moderation. It is related to purity ? chastity is sexual purity ? and to the virtue of moderation.

I would like to make a few comments on the concept of chastity, which was at the core of traditional Christian morals. It has become alien to modern man. Its decline is related to the reaction against St. Paul's zealous anti-sensualism(96) and to later Manichean exaggerations. The Bahá'í concept of chastity, however, should not be misconstrued as suppression or deformation of man's sexuality. It is rather the control and cultivation of his procreative power. The virtue of chastity and the complementary prohibition of fornication in The Kitáb-i-Aqdas(97) means the confinement of sexual relations within the institution of marriage, the legal bond between two heterosexual partners. Marriage appears in scripture as a "divine institution" and a "fortress for well-being and salvation."(98) Chastity, which involves renouncing pre-marital and extra-marital sexual intimacy prevents man from becoming a play-thing of his desires.

Bahá'u'lláh's

sexual morality is a return to a position supported by the moral systems of all revealed religions, and yet, it is a position which does not hold contempt for the body or identify sensuality as sinful.

3. The third category is the "worldly virtues" which concern our relationship to others and guide our daily conduct.(99)

Here the cardinal virtues are justice, wisdom and moderation and the foundation is love. All other worldly virtues such as kindness, righteousness, courage, fortitude, hospitality, courtesy, meekness, modesty, contentment, impartiality, freedom from prejudice, forbearance, thankfulness and so on are related to one of these three cardinal virtues and subordinate to them.

Nevertheless, there are two virtues which are not only of crucial importance for one's attitude and behaviour to others, but also for one's own spiritual life:(100) truthfulness and trustworthiness.(101)

a)

Truthfulness (and the associated virtues of honesty, uprightness and sincerity) is "the foundation of all human virtues", (102) without which "progress and success in all the worlds of God is impossible." (103)

Truthfulness is of crucial importance for one's spiritual health. It is the opposite of falseness, hypocrisy, dissimulation, untruthfulness and lying, which is "the worst of qualities", the "most odious of attributes", the "foundation of all evil", "a destroyer of all human perfections and the cause of innumerable vices." (104) Hypocrisy, a constant danger particularly in religious circles, is strongly condemned.(105)

b)

Trustworthiness has been elevated in the Bahá'í scripture, where it appears as "the supreme ornament of the people of Bahá", "the greatest portal leading unto the tranquillity and security of the people." (106) Trust is a fundamental condition of life. Mistrust, which stunts men's spiritual life and their relationship to one another, can only be overcome in an atmosphere of trust.

c)

Justice ('adl wa ináf) has a unique rank. It is the sum of all worldly virtues.(107)

Its precedence over all the worldly virtues is in accordance with the philosophical tradition.(108) Justice is a complex concept and its many different ramifications cannot be covered here. It should be mentioned that the Golden Rule(109) is also an expression of justice as are such injunctions and commandments as to pay "regard for the rights that are due to one's parents" or to "refrain from slander, abuse and whatever causeth sadness in men", "from backbiting or calumny."(110)

d)

Moderation, one of the classical ethic's four cardinal virtues, aims at the "happy mean." It is a fundamental value for individual and social ethics. According to Bahá'u'lláh, everything "carried to excess" exercises "a pernicious influence upon men", especially freedom and material civilisation. Hence, moderation should be exercised "in all matters", (111) an injunction which applies even to the practise of the virtues themselves.

e)

Wisdom and prudence, which are concerned with the right way of thinking correspond to the complex concept of ikma.(112)

This term denotes the discernment of relations and connections, the knowledge of the practical conditions and requirements of life, the real assessment of concrete situations, the clear and right way of knowing, concluding, judging and planning, and the choice of the "right means" and "right ends"(113)

:

"The sword of wisdom is hotter than summer heat, and sharper than blades of steel."(114) Man should "put on the armour of wisdom" and "be guided by wisdom" in all his doings, and "under all conditions."(115) The source of wisdom is the fear of God, which is "the essence of wisdom."(116)

Wisdom and prudence are the beginning of all moral action and thought. Both are always focused on the good. Not only must the end be good, but the means must be good as well. The end does not justify the means. Wisdom and prudence should be applied especially when propagating the message of God(117) or implementing the laws of God, "so that nothing might happen that could cause disturbance and dissension or raise clamour among the heedless"(118) ? a clear warning against fanatical rigidity and excessive legalism.

f)

Devotion to others: love, loving-kindness, mercy and compassion.

Whereas justice is the sum of all virtues,(119) love (maabba) is the foundation of all morality, the very prerequisite of the "worldly virtues." These two are interdependent: love which is devoid of justice, is mere sentimentality and emotive effusiveness, it is, as Thomas Aquinas put it, "the mother of disintegration"(120) ; justice without love, however, turns into cruelty.(121)

All men should "show forth love, affection, compassion and harmony", not "perversity and rancour." The motivating power of such an all-embracing love is the love of God, which is inseparably linked to the first commandment, to love one's neighbour, and which is expressed in the attitude of "loving sympathy", benevolence, affection and kindness: "Look not upon the creature of God, except with the eye of kindness and mercy"; "A kindly tongue is the lodestone of the hearts of men." Tolerance, the opposite of fanaticism, described as one of the "two lights amidst the darkness of the world", (122) is an expression of love. Compassion expresses itself in the consolation of the sad, assistance of the weak, charity to the poor, and care of the sick and suffering.

Whilst love is a virtue of the individual, it has also far-reaching effects on society. It unites men, is a cause of fellowship and friendship: "Be ye as the fingers of one hand, the members of one body" ... "Be united in counsel, be one in thought." (123) Regarding religious differences that provoke dissension, Bahá'u'lláh admonishes us: "The religion of God is for love and unity, make it not a cause of enmity and dissension." (124)

Hence His commandment to "consort with the followers of all religions in a spirit of friendliness and fellowship", with "amity and concord." (125) The spirit of love is to overcome "the dissensions that divide the peoples and kindreds of the earth" in such a way that "all mankind become the upholders of one order and the inhabitants of one city." (126)

In the message of Bahá'u'lláh, the love of one's neighbour is elevated to a new dimension to include an all-embracing love to mankind (127) :

"That one is indeed a man who, today, dedicateth himself to the service of the entire human race", "to the best interests of the peoples and the kindreds of the earth." (128) Thus, man should not be preoccupied solely with his own interests, (129) but rather be concerned with the common weal and the welfare of mankind. (130)

Complementary to the enumerations of virtues, (131)

Bahá'í scripture contains numerous warnings, not to commit "anything which will bring shame upon you", to "eschew all manner of wickedness" not to be "of the mischiefmakers" (132) and the condemnation of all vices such as envy, covetousness, malice, haughtiness, pride, sloth and idleness, craftiness and suspicion, cruelty to animals, tyranny, bigotry and hate, strife, dissension and rancour, unseemly talk, backbiting and calumny, cursing and reviling, hypocrisy and fanaticism.

Bahá'u'lláh's ethical instructions should not be misconstrued as a dry bloodless philosophy of duty under the yoke of the law. Bahá'í ethic is rather a methodical way of life according to the Word and the Law. The "yoke" of the law is, as the Gospel says, "meek", (133) and Bahá'u'lláh assures us that he who takes it upon himself will find "days of blissful joy" (134) in store. Those who tread this path are on the way to becoming a "new man" (135)

:

"A race of men" promises Bahá'u'lláh, "incomparable in character, shall be raised up which, with the feet of detachment, will tread under all who are in heaven and on earth, and will cast the sleeve of holiness over all that hath been created from water and clay." (136)

End Notes

This paper is a preliminary exploration of ideas which will be described more fully in a forthcoming piece by the author.

Note that where no paragraph number is given, Bahá'í Scripture is quoted as chapter or section, followed by paragraph number after the colon.

"Ethics for a global society," The Bahá'í Studies Review 4.1 (1994): 47-56.

"Nihilism stands at the door: Whence comes the uncanniest of all guests?" (The Will to Power, Towards an Outline [London: Widenfeld and Nicolson, 1968] 1). Cited in The Promised Day is Come (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1963) 117; Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, rev. edn., 1978) 99.

Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh revealed after the Kitáb-i-Aqdas (Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1978) 6:19; cf. also 8:53.

cf. Hans Küng, Global Responsibility. In Search of a New World Ethic (London: SCM Press, 1991); Hans Küng/Karl-Josef Kuschel (eds.), A Global Ethic. The Declaration of the Parliament of World's Religions (London: SCM Press, 1993); Hans Küng, Ja zum Weltethos. Perspektive für die Suche nach Orientierung (München-Zürich, 1995).

"Ethische Aspekte des Aqdas," in: Gesellschaft für Bahá'í-Studien (ed.), Aspekte des Kitáb-i-Aqdas (Hofheim: Bahá'í-Verlag, 1995) 276-302.

Tablets 11:13; see also The Hidden Words (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, rev. edn., 1954), Persian no. 8.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, The Promulgation of Universal Peace. Talks Delivered by 'Abdu'l-Bahá during His Visit to the United States and Canada in 1912 (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 2nd edn, 1982) 403.

The Hidden Words, Persian 35.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas: The Most Holy Book (Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1992) 86; Tablets 4:13.

The Secret of Divine Civilization (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 2nd edn, 1970) 60.

Tablets 17:60; 5:11, 16.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 183.

Tablets 10:2.

Gleanings 92:3.

"He doeth what he pleaseth" (The Kitáb-i-Aqdas paras. 7, 78).

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas paras. 47, 161-163.

I refer to my publication Die Freiheit und ihre Schranken. Zum Begriff der Freiheit in Bahá'u'lláh's Kitáb-i-Aqdas (Hofheim: Bahá'í-Verlag, 1994), pp. 38 ff., where the central significance which the Scripture assigns to reason, its role and its limits and the concepts of "true liberty" (The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 125; Gleanings 45) and reason which is enlightened by the Holy Spirit (cf. Paris Talks. Addresses given by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in Paris in 1911-12 [London: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 12th edn., 1971] 9:20; 17:10; 22:5) are discussed.

Paris Talks 5:13; The Hidden Words, Arabic 11, 13, 22; The Kitáb-i-Íqán. The Book of Certitude (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1974) paras. 110, 108; Paris Talks 9:19, 11, 16; 49:16; 18:3.

Some Answered Questions (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 4th rev. edn., 1981) 29:7.

Matt. 5:48.

The Hidden Words, Arabic 59.

The Hidden Words, Persian 40.

Promulgation 226.

Whereas according to Martin Luther the peccatum originale resulted in the complete perversion of human nature, which is therefore exclusively dependent on the divine grace, according to Catholic doctrine Adam's Fall has caused a "deterioration" of man's nature, which retained, supported by grace, its urge to the good: "gratia supponit naturam."

cf. The Imperishable Dominion. The Bahá'í Faith and the Future of Mankind (Oxford: George Ronald, 1983) 49 ff.; 202 ff.

From Greek: hedoné, pleasure, lust, the philosophical doctrine founded by Aristippos and Epicur that pleasure is the principle good and should be the aim of action. Hedonism denotes a pleasure-seeking life-style as well.

The Hidden Words, Persian 40. Bahá'u'lláh's prohibition of intoxicating drinks, of all habit-forming drugs and gambling should be seen in this light (The Kitáb-i-Aqdas paras. 119, 155, 190). Those who use these substances, which inevitably reduce man's responsibility or in the case of those who gamble are in constant danger of becoming addicted, and addiction is the worst of all bondages in this world. Bahá'ís are aiming at a drug-free society.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, Promulgation of Universal Peace 404.

Gleanings 109:2.

Qur'án 45:22.

The Hidden Words, Persian 45.

The Kitáb-i-Íqán, para. 251.

cf. Tablets 17:96 (p. 258); Gleanings 153:8; 123:1-4; 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Selections from the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá (Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1978) 1:7.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 40; The Hidden Words, Persian 44; Gleanings 65:8.

"Should a man wish to adorn himself with the ornaments of the earth, to wear its apparels, or partake of the benefits it can bestow, no harm can befall him, if he alloweth nothing whatever to intervene between him and God, for God hath ordained every good thing, whether created in the heavens or in the earth, for such of His servants as truly believe in Him. Eat ye, O people, of the good things which God hath allowed you, and deprive not yourselves from His wondrous bounties." (Gleanings 128:4 [cf. Qur'án 5:87; 2:171]; cf. also Tablets 3:13; 6:57; Epistle to the Son of the Wolf (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, rev. edn., 1976), para. 84 [p. 49]).

Gleanings 86:2.

Tablets 3:25; 8:61; 11:6.

The Hidden Words, Persian 59.

The Hidden Words, Persian 60.

From Greek: theos, God, and nómos, law. An ethics which is based on God's legislation.

The Hidden Words, Arabic 38.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, Selections 105:1.

The Hidden Words, Persian 67.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, Selections 127:21.

As the German proverb expresses: "Die Nürnberger hängen keinen, sie hätten ihn denn."

In the Persian Bayán the Báb revealed: "Worship thou God in such wise that if thy worship lead thee to the fire, no alteration in thine adoration would be produced, and so likewise if thy recompense should be paradise... That which is worthy of His Essence is to worship Him for His sake, without fear of fire or hope for paradise" (Selections from the Writings of the Báb [Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1976] 3:2:1 = pp. 77,78).

Gleanings 99; in Christian faith metanoia, cf. Matt. 3:2; Mark 1:15; Luke 15:7.

Gleanings 106:3; Some Answered Questions ch. 3.

Gleanings 137:4.

The Hidden Words, Arabic, Preamble.

Gleanings 134:2; 131:4.

The Báb, Selections 2:24:2 (p. 54); see also The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 42;

Epistle to the Son of the Wolf para. 18 (p. 13).

'Abdu'l-Bahá, Paris Talks 44:14.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, Promulgation of Universal Peace 106.

Ibid. The whole passage reads: "These [ordinances] are essential or fundamental, one and the same in all religions, changeless and eternal ? reality not subject to transformation. Abraham heralded this reality, Moses promulgated it, and Jesus Christ established it in the world of mankind. All the divine Prophets and Messengers were the instruments and channels of this same eternal, essential truth."

Quoted from J. E. Esslemont, Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era (London: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1974) 163. "Love" is standing as a pars pro toto for the unchanging core of religion. 'Abdu'l-Bahá called it "the Holy of Holies, which is the essence of the Law of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Christ, Muhammad and Bahá'u'lláh, and which lasts and is established in all prophetic cycles. It will never be abrogated, for it is spiritual and not material truth" (Some Answered Questions 11:9).

On this subject see U. Schaefer, Beyond the Clash of Religions. The Emergence of a New Paradigm (Prague: Zero Palm Press, 1995) 139 ff.

cf. 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Selections 23:3; Some Answered Questions 11:12; 20:6-8.
Aristotle stated, "all statements concerning matters of action should be made sketchily and not with precision" (The Nicomachean Ethics [Dordrecht-Holland/Boston-USA: D. Reidel Publishing Company, 1975] 1104a).
From Greek: télos, an end; and lógos, a doctrine; teleological: being directed toward a definite end, having an ultimate purpose.
Tablets 6:3.
Gleanings 147:2; Tablets 4:13; 6:27; 8:56.
Tablets 4:13.
From Greek: deon, that which is binding, duty.
Gleanings 134:2.
As Plato taught, the balance of virtues is decisive for living a good and happy life. On this subject, see also U. Schaefer, The Imperishable Dominion 213, 218-219.
Gleanings 134:2.
Ibid.
The Hidden Words, Arabic 5,7,9; Gleanings 15:5; 140:1-2; Some Answered Questions 34:3.
The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 1.
Tawakkul, "the source of all good" (Tablets 10:2; Kitáb-i-Íqán para. 214).
Gleanings 5:2.
"The essence of wisdom" (Tablets 10:3, which corresponds to Prov. 9:10; Joel 28:28; Ps. 111:10); "the fountain-head of all goodly deeds" (Tablets 8:39; see also Gleanings 15:5; 66:1,2,6; 114:2; 118:4; 126:4; 134:3; 153:1).
Al-istiqáma, Gleanings 133:2; 134:1,3; 143:1.
The Hidden Words, Arabic 48; The Kitáb-i-Íqán para. 251; "Rock-like stability" in His Cause (Gleanings 162:2).
abr, Tablets 14:11;
The Hidden Words, Arabic 48; Gleanings 100:4; 114:18; The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 42.
The Kitáb-i-Aqdas paras. 38, 153.
Tablets 4:16; Gleanings 5:2. The Hidden Words, Persian 47.
Gleanings 134:2.
'Abdu'l-Bahá, Selections 146:9.
Matt. 9:48.
Paris Talks 5:15.
The Hidden Words, Pers., Envoi.
cf. The Hidden Words, Persian 8; The Kitáb-i-Aqdas paras. 54, 83, 84, 129, 178; Gleanings 46:4; 81.
The subject is further discussed in my essay Ethische Aspekte des Rauchens. Ein Beitrag zur Bahá'í-Ethik (Hofheim: Bahá'í-Verlag, 1993) in which a whole chapter is dedicated to purity and cleanliness in religious history. An English edition (On the Ethics of Smoking) is in preparation to be published by Zero Palm Press.
Gleanings 134:2.
cf. The Hidden Words, Persian 44, 55, 68, 69; The Hidden Words, Arabic 1, 58, 59.

cf. 2:222; 5:8-9; 9:109; 74:3-4; 79:18 etc.

"Purification is called half of the faith" is a Hadíth, quoted from Maulana Muhammad 'Alí, A Manual of Hadíth (Lahore: The Ahmadiyya Anjuman Ishaat Islam, n.d.) IV:2; see also Shorter Encyclopaedia of Islam (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1961) "tahará", p. 559.

Quoted from Selections from the Writings of the Báb 98.

Epistle to the Son of the Wolf para. 40 (p. 23).

cf. the verses 10,18,74,76,106.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 46; see also Selections from the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá 129. On the purity of heart see Gleanings 141:4; 60:3; The Hidden Words, Arabic 58,59; The Kitáb-i-Íqán, para 214 (p. 172).

cf. I Cor. 7:1 ff.; more on this subject see U. Schaefer, The Imperishable Dominion p. 176 ff.

Ziná', cf. The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 49; "Questions and Answers" 49.

Bahá'u'lláh, quoted from Bahá'í Prayers (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1982) 105, whereas Martin Luther regarded it as merely "permitted fornication". This was in accordance with I Cor. 7:1-2: "... It is good for a man not to touch a woman. Nevertheless, to avoid fornication let every man have his own wife"; cf. also I Cor 7:6-7.

The philosophers (especially Aristotle and Kant) have focused on them in their ethical treatises.

Thus they belong to both categories 2 and 3.

cf. Gleanings 134:2.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, quoted from Shoghi Effendi, The Advent of Divine Justice (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1971) 22.

Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá Abbas, vol. 2 (Chicago, 1919) 459.

Some Answered Questions 57:12.

The Kitáb-i-Íqán para. 29; The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 36, 108 (see also Note 135); Tablets 6:4; Gleanings 128:6; Some Answered Questions 19:6; 76:3.

Tablets 4:19-20; 8:40,44,57; Gleanings 114:3.

"The most fundamental among human virtues" (Gleanings 100:6), "the best-beloved of all things" (The Hidden Words, Arabic 2), "the sign of My loving-kindness" (ibid.), the "essence of all that We have ordained for you" (Tablets 10:23).

cf. Plato, The Republic (Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1955) marg. no. 336; Aristotle, The Nicomachean Ethics, E3,1129b; Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1964) II-II qu. 58.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 148; Kitáb-i-Íqán para. 215 (p. 194); Tablets 6:20; Gleanings 66:8.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas, "Questions and Answers" 104, 106; Tablets 15:2; The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 19.

Tablets 6:31; 11:19; 6:31; Gleanings 163:2; Tablets 11:19. For more information on this subject, cf. The Imperishable Dominion 217 ff.

ikma comprises both, sapientia and prudentia.

Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics 1144a.

Epistle to the Son of the Wolf para. 93 (p. 55).

Tablets 9:5; Gleanings 96:4; Tablets 11:38.

Tablets 10:3.

"Subdue the citadels of men's hearts with the swords of wisdom and utterance" (Epistle to the Son of the Wolf para 93 [p. 55]; see also Tablets 17:43;
Gleanings 163:5.

cf. A Synopsis and Codification of the Laws and Ordinances of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas (Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1973) 4.

Tablets 10:23.

In Matthaeum 5,2 (S. Thomae Aquinatis Opera Omnia, vol. V: Commentaria in Scripturas [Stuttgart: Friedrich Fromann Verlag, 1980]).

Ibid.

Tablets 6:42; 9:5; Gleanings 154:1; Tablets 6:16; 7:4; Gleanings 5:3; 82:3;
109:2; 136:4; 146; 14:15; 132:5; Tablets 4:12; 11:21.

Tablets 11:6,38; 6:38; 8:74; Gleanings 92:3; 146; The Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 58;
Tablets 9:5.

Tablets 15:4.

Tablets 3:5; 4:10; 7:13; Kitáb-i-Aqdas para. 144.

Gleanings 156.

cf. Tablets 7:13, 16, 34; Gleanings 156.

Tablets 11:13; Paris Talks 55:2.

cf. The Hidden Words, Arabic 55; Tablets 7:11; 9:4.

cf. Tablets 7:11; 6:20; 9:4; 11:13; 13:30; The Hidden Words, Arabic 55; The Secret of Divine Civilisation 9, 39, 193; Some Answered Questions 15:7.

See, for instance, The Kitáb-i-Íqán paras. 214-216; Gleanings 130; 134;
Tablets 9:4-5.

Gleanings 128:8.

Matt. 11:29.

Gleanings 153:9.

On this concept and its history see U. Schaefer, The Imperishable Dominion 206 ff.

Bahá'u'lláh, quoted from Shoghi Effendi, The Advent of Divine Justice 26.

METADATA

Views24386 views since posted 1998; last edit 2012;

previous at archive.org.../schaefer_new_morality_outline;

URLs changed in 2010, see archive.org.../bahai-library.org

Language

English

Permission

author and publisher

History

Formatted 1997 by Chris Manvell.

Share

Shortlink: bahai-library.com/117

Citation: ris/117

select Collection:

Archives

Articles
Articles-unpublished
Audio
Bibliographies
BIC
Biographies
Books
Chronologies
Compilations
Compilations-NSA
Compilations-personal
Documents
East-asia
Encyclopedia
Essays
Etc
Excerpts
Fiction
Glossaries
Guardian
Histories
Introductory Letters
Maps
Music
Newspapers
NSA-documents
NSA-letters
Personal
Pilgrims
Poetry
Presentations
Resources
Reviews
Scripts
Software
Statistics
Study
Talks
Theses
Transcripts
Translations
UHJ-documents
UHJ-letters
Video Visual Writings

home

sitemap

series

chronology

search:

author

title

date

tags

adv. search

languages

inventory

bibliography

abbreviations

links

about

contact

RSS

new

— The New morality: An outline (Used by permission of the curator)